

Draft Call

Camps to the Far East to replace combat veterans in Korea.

The cutback in army strength, to be achieved over a 16-month period, will be delayed for three months, however, until all combat veterans have been rotated and a fixed tour of duty has been established in Korea.

Draft calls will double next July because of the two-year cycle of filling army needs begun with the outbreak of the Korean War when a large number of draftees were inducted. Since the draft term is two years, the army's peak demand for replacements occurs every two years.

To maintain the army at its present strength, about 600,000 men will have to be drafted in the year beginning July, 1954—or double the number due to be called in the current 12 months.

With the doubling of draft calls next year, defense manpower experts believe draft boards may begin to encounter serious shortages of draft-eligible youths. They said the manpower pool is now "roughly in balance" with demand, and a drop in draft calls after a truce would result in a "slight margin of safety."

John Randolph reported from the front that the South Korean attacks jumped off just before dawn.

The first outpost fell in a 1-hour, 35-minute fight.

Machine guns, hand grenades and infantry fire still swept the other three battle hills more than two hours after the attack started.

The outposts were among the six which the Chinese seized on the Kumsong Front in the past few days.

To Conclude Hearing on Bell Aug. 6

LITTLE ROCK, ARK. — The Arkansas Public Service Commission will wind up Aug. 6 hearing on two today or tomorrow on the telephone rate increases by Southwestern Bell's administration's demand for telephone rates of some $3,000,000.

That date was set for cross examination of Bell witnesses who yesterday gave robust testimony in support of the company's application.

The company wants to make permanent around $2,350,000 annually in increased rates now being collected under bond. It also wants the commission to permit it to earn more than the traditional six per cent return on its investment. This second request is for an increase of $1,000,000.

R. A. Moran, the company's accounting supervisor for Arkansas, testified yesterday that even with the bonded increase the company's earnings still are under the customary six per cent.

He introduced a financial summary for the six months ending June 30 which he said showed that on the present approved rate base the company earned 5½ per cent.

If the rate base was upped to the figure Moran thinks it should be and the company were given credit for the additional cost of property replacements, the return would be 3½ per cent, he witness said.

lemen. They don't like to give up their authority lightly or at all. A number of contemporary Russian history has been how Malenkov was able to bring off the demotion and firing of his right-hand man, the fellow who nominated him to the post of premier. It took an unusual man, or men, to work the trick.

The rivalry between Malenkov and Beria was apparent to a number of Western diplomats before I left Moscow. A certain Western envoy used to refer to Malenkov in conversation as No. 1, to Beria as No. 2 and to Molotov as No. 3. Many times I heard him say, "No. 2 is No. 1, and No. 1 is No. 2. And my arithmetic is not good enough to do addition and subtraction with No. 3, 4 and 5."

What do we know about Malenkov? Not much. I've seen him a lot of times. But I've never had such a good look at him as that Sunday afternoon in mid-March just after Stalin's death and burial. That was when the Supreme Soviet met in the Kremlin and elected him chairman of the council of ministers, or Premier, on Beria's endorsement.

I thought of Stalin's characteristic entrances onto the platform of the Supreme Soviet's meeting place. I'd seen the old Georgian saunter onto the podium so many times, he would look neither to his right nor left, but out over the audience. No smile. No frown. Just that cold Stalin stare. Then, after many minutes, when you wondered if the applause was ever going to stop, he'd sit in one of the rear rows on the platform.

Molotov, Malenkov or Beria would usually sit closest to him, but never in the seat immediately next to Stalin's. They always left a seat's space between the dictator and themselves. Stalin seemed to like it this way.

So I thought of Stalin when Malenkov walked onto the stage.

He looked out over the audience and seemed to give the deputies some recognition. The applause was loud. But Malenkov didn't applaud himself as Stalin used to applaud himself. He let the clapping go a little while and then halted it by sitting down. And he sat down with the rest of the boys.

The new foreign correspondents at that Kremlin session had good seats, and I came early enough to get one of the vacant front row chairs. A plainclothes policeman was sitting in the fourth seat, but next to his chair, mine was the best.

Malenkov is a fat man, but he's one of those fat men who move with a certain grace. He's light on his feet and he walks with a quick, sure stride.

He has long black hair that he parts on one side. Dark intelligent eyes, if you can say eyes are intelligent. A triple chin and he wears the traditional party khaki jacket, long khaki trousers and usually black shoes.

He knows what to do with his hands and this doesn't include sticking them in his trouser pockets. His voice is firm and extremely clear. His delivery is that of a practiced orator. He looks at his audience when he speaks.

He seems sure of himself. He handled himself very well at this first public appearance after becoming premier. He paid not the slightest bit of attention to Beria, Molotov, Bulganin, Khrushchev or anyone else. He was in charge.

This was the speech in which he said there were no troublesome issues that could not be solved by peaceful means, including those with the United States.

Few foreigners have had conversations with Malenkov. I have two notations from men who sat beside him in Kremlin banquets.

Note no. 1: "He didn't talk very much and when I told him a joke he managed a faint smile. He seemed preoccupied. He volunteered no remark to me. He had a certain poise. However, an unpleasant character, I'd say."

Note no. 2: "He seemed interested in his food more than he was interested in me as a dinner partner. But talking through a translator, he did appear to be intelligent, though reticent. When I made some remark about the weather, he said he was never very conscious of the weather. All in all, not the kind of a fellow with whom to take a long trip on a tandem bicycle."

At 52, he is one of the youngest of the Communist leaders. And of course, he's playing for time. He is consolidating his position, or trying to. Does he have time enough? And strength and intelligence enough? I believe so. And I believe that Malenkov, more than any single man, is running Russia.

If you have a kid, the neighbors on one side of you says you are ruining the boy through lack of discipline. But if you spank him, the neighbor on the other side calls the cops.

You give up smoking because the doctors tell you it can be bad for your heart. Then you eat so much you gain 25 pounds, and the same doctor says that's bad for your heart, too.

So you starve yourself slim, and this time the doctor says you got low blood pressure. You bread and brood, and when you come back the doctor says, "Now you got high blood pressure." Can you win? None. You're so nervous you start smoking again.

Some older men then turn to wine, women and song. But the wine annoys their liver, any woman they like only thinks them annoying, and what does that leave them to sing but the blues?

Or take the ambitious man or woman. At 30 they are too disturbed because they aren't sure where they are going. At 45 they are even more disturbed because they have found out.

So R goes, from problem to problem. Yet there is only one real problem in life — and that's how to get the most out of it.

The only sensible rule for dealing with problems along the way is to think them through — and never lose a small one by trading it for a bigger one. It is foolish to have to yearn at the end because you have wasted your years by measuring your worried from a tumbler and your joys from an eyeglass.

Christianity MUST Win! . . . CHRISTIANITY WILL WIN!

From Washington, from this influential dome, radiate influences that shall determine destinies of peoples around the earth. Ambitious and courageous minds of world-disposed men have put at the disposal of this great capitol, such power as no other nation has wielded. May the policies of the Senate, House and Pentagon, be wholesome, redeeming, and may they touch a world in saving grace and with Godly purpose.
